

 KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Declined to Extend by State v. Pepitone, Ill.App. 3 Dist.,
February 10, 2017

2016 IL 119563
Supreme Court of Illinois.

The PEOPLE of the State of Illinois, Appellant, v.
Mark MINNIS, Appellee.

No. 119563.
|
Oct. 20, 2016.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 21, 2016.

Synopsis

Background: Sex offender moved to dismiss indictment charging him with failing to register a social networking website in violation of the Sex Offender Registration Act. The Circuit Court, McLean County, granted motion and found that internet disclosure provision of Sex Offender Registration Act was overbroad in violation of First Amendment. State appealed directly to Supreme Court.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Freeman, J., held that:

[1] sex offender's threat of prosecution from failure to disclose his e-mail addresses was real and immediate, and thus, defendant had standing to challenge entire provision of Sex Offender Registration Act requiring disclosure of internet identities and websites as being overly broad in violation of First Amendment;

[2] internet disclosure provision was content neutral, and thus was subject to intermediate scrutiny;

[3] internet disclosure provision advanced substantial government interest of preventing sex offenses against children and protecting the public from the danger of recidivist sex offenders; and

[4] internet disclosure provision advanced substantial governmental interest without chilling more speech than necessary, and thus was not substantially overbroad in violation of First Amendment.

Reversed and remanded.

West Headnotes (58)

[1] Constitutional Law
🔑 Criminal Law

Sex offender's threat of prosecution from failure to disclose his e-mail addresses was real and immediate, although he was only charged with failing to disclose social networking website, and thus, offender had standing to challenge entire provision of Sex Offender Registration Act requiring disclosure of internet identities and websites as being overbroad in violation of First Amendment's free speech provision; offender was under continuing obligation to disclose internet identities and websites, offender maintained and used e-mail addresses as well as social networking website, and any failure to disclose e-mail addresses would subject him to prosecution under identity disclosure provision. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; S.H.A. 730 ILCS 150/3(a).

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
🔑 First Amendment

The First Amendment applies to the States through the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1, 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law*🔑 Overbreadth in General

The assertion of a First Amendment overbreadth claim is not the application of a procedural rule but is a function of substantive First Amendment law. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law*🔑 Facial invalidity

A state court may not avoid a proper facial attack to the constitutionality of a statute brought on federal constitutional grounds.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law*🔑 Requirement That Rights Be Affected*Constitutional Law*🔑 Criminal Law

Generally, a party may not raise, and a court will not consider, a constitutional challenge to a statutory provision that does not affect that party; thus, a court will not consider a constitutional challenge to a criminal statutory provision under which a defendant has not been charged.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law*🔑 Criminal Law

The traditional rule that a court will not consider a constitutional challenge to a criminal statutory provision under which a defendant has not been charged reflects two cardinal principles: the personal nature of constitutional rights and prudential limitations on constitutional adjudication.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law*🔑 First Amendment in General

The First Amendment overbreadth doctrine represents a departure from the traditional rule that a person may not challenge a statute on the ground that it might be applied unconstitutionally in circumstances other than those before the court; this exception to the usual rules governing standing reflects the transcendent value to all society of constitutionally protected expression. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law*🔑 First Amendment in General

In the First Amendment context, courts permit attacks on overly broad statutes without requiring that the person making the attack show that his or her specific conduct was actually protected. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law*🔑 Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

A person, challenging a statute as being overly broad in violation of the free speech provision of the First Amendment, must present more than subjective allegations of a subjective chill of protected speech; there must be a claim of specific present objective harm or a threat of specific future harm. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law*🔑 Criminal Law

Where a person engages in conduct arguably affected with a constitutional interest but proscribed by statute and there exists a credible threat of prosecution thereunder, that person need not risk being arrested and charged before challenging the provision under the First Amendment on overbreadth grounds. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law

🔑 Invalidity as applied

An “as applied” challenge requires the challenging party to show that a statute is unconstitutional as it applies to him or her; thus, the particular facts and circumstances surrounding the challenging party become relevant.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law

🔑 Facial invalidity

Constitutional Law

🔑 Invalidity as applied

Without an evidentiary record, any finding that a statute is unconstitutional “as applied” is premature, and the constitutional challenge must be facial.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Appeal and Error

🔑 Cases Triable in Appellate Court

The constitutionality of a statute is a question of law that the Supreme Court reviews de novo.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law

🔑 Presumptions and Construction as to Constitutionality

All statutes are presumed to be constitutional.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law

🔑 Clearly, positively, or unmistakably unconstitutional

Constitutional Law

🔑 Burden of Proof

The party challenging the constitutionality of a statute has the burden of clearly establishing its invalidity.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law

🔑 Presumptions and Construction as to Constitutionality

A court must construe a statute so as to uphold its constitutionality, if reasonably possible.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law

🔑 Anonymous speech

The First Amendment right to freedom of speech includes the right to publish and distribute writings while remaining anonymous. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law

🔑 Anonymous speech

Anonymity in publishing and distributing writings is a shield from the tyranny of the majority, and it thus exemplifies the purpose behind the Bill of Rights and of the free speech provision of the First Amendment in particular: to protect unpopular individuals from retaliation, and their ideas from suppression, at the hand of an intolerant society. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law

🔑 Internet

First Amendment protections for speech extend fully to communications made through the medium of the internet. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law

🔑 Internet

The First Amendment right to speak anonymously extends to those expressing views on the internet. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law

🔑 Absolute nature of right

The First Amendment right of free speech is not absolute at all times and under all circumstances. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law

🔑 Anonymous speech

Constitutional Law

🔑 Internet

The First Amendment right to anonymous speech, including anonymous internet speech, is not absolute. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law

🔑 Facial invalidity

In a typical facial challenge, a defendant has to establish that there is no set of circumstances under which the statute would be valid; the fact that the statute could be found unconstitutional under some circumstances would not establish its facial invalidity.

Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Constitutional Law

🔑 Overbreadth

Constitutional Law

🔑 Law Enforcement;Criminal Conduct

A facial challenge based on First Amendment overbreadth grounds is provided out of concern that the threat of enforcement of an overbroad law may chill or deter constitutionally protected speech, especially when the statute imposes criminal penalties. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Constitutional Law

🔑 Substantial impact, necessity of

Recognizing that overbreadth invalidation under the First Amendment is strong medicine, a law may be invalidated as overbroad only if a substantial number of its applications to protected speech are unconstitutional, judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[26] Constitutional Law

🔑 Overbreadth in General

In a facial challenge to the constitutionality of a statute on First Amendment overbreadth grounds, the court first construes the challenged statute; a court cannot determine whether a statute reaches too far without first knowing what the statute covers. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Mental Health

🔑 Registration and Community Notification

The Sex Offender Registration Act and the Sex Offender Community Notification Law operate in tandem, providing a comprehensive scheme for the registration of Illinois sex offenders and the dissemination of information about the offenders to the public. S.H.A. 730 ILCS 150/3(a), 152/101 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[28] Statutes

🔑 Language and intent, will, purpose, or policy

Statutes

🔑 Plain Language; Plain, Ordinary, or Common Meaning

The Supreme Court's primary objective in construing a statutory scheme is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the legislature; the most reliable indicator of legislative intent is the language of the statute, given its plain and ordinary meaning.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[29] Statutes

🔑 Related provisions

When interpreting a statute, a court must view the statute as a whole, construing words and phrases in light of other relevant statutory provisions and not in isolation.

Cases that cite this headnote

[30] Statutes

🔑 Superfluosity

When interpreting a statute, each word, clause, and sentence of a statute must be given a reasonable meaning, if possible, and should not be rendered superfluous.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[31] Statutes

🔑 Purpose

Statutes

🔑 Construction in View of Effects, Consequences, or Results

When interpreting a statute, a court may consider the reason for the law, the problems sought to be remedied, the purposes to be achieved, and the consequences of construing the statute one way or another.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[32] Statutes

🔑 Presumptions, inferences, and burden of proof

When interpreting a statute, a court presumes that the legislature did not intend to create absurd, inconvenient, or unjust results.

Cases that cite this headnote

[33] Mental Health

🔑 Persons and offenses included

A sex offender who is subject to the Sex Offender Registration Act is, in turn, also subject to the provisions of the Sex Offender Community Notification Law. S.H.A. 730 ILCS 150/3(a), 152/101 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[34] Infants

🔑 Juvenile Sex Offenders

Under the Sex Offender Community Notification Law, public information concerning juvenile sex offenders is much more restricted than information concerning adult sex offenders. S.H.A. 730 ILCS 152/121(a).

Cases that cite this headnote

[35] Infants

🔑 Juvenile Sex Offenders

While the Sex Offender Community Notification Law, as it pertains to adults, provides for wide dissemination of sex offender registration information to the public, a juvenile sex offender's registration information is available only to a very limited group of people. S.H.A. 730 ILCS 152/121(a, b).

Cases that cite this headnote

[36] Constitutional Law

🔑 First Amendment in General

For a statutory scheme to warrant First Amendment scrutiny, there must be a realistic danger that the statute will significantly compromise recognized First Amendment rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[37] Constitutional Law

🔑 Overbreadth in General

If a statute challenged as being overbroad does not reach constitutionally protected conduct under the First Amendment, the court's analysis ends. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[38] Constitutional Law

🔑 Internet

Provision of Sex Offender Registration Act, requiring the disclosure of internet identities and websites, impacted constitutionally protected conduct, and thus, First Amendment scrutiny was warranted in action challenging the provision as facially overbroad in violation of sex offender's anonymous free speech rights under First Amendment; although disclosure provision did not force offender to reveal information as precondition to expression, the Registration Act imposed criminal sanctions for noncompliance, which could deter offenders from exercising their rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; S.H.A. 730 ILCS 150/3(a), 152/101 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[39] Constitutional Law

🔑 Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

Constitutional violations may arise from the deterrent or chilling effect of governmental regulations that fall short of a direct prohibition against the exercise of First Amendment free speech rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[40] Constitutional Law

🔑 Anonymous speech

A statute that operates retroactively can nonetheless unconstitutionally deter or chill anonymous speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[41] Constitutional Law

🔑 Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

Constitutional Law

🔑 Strict or exacting scrutiny; compelling interest test

Content-based laws are presumptively unconstitutional under the First Amendment's free speech provision and may be justified only if they survive so-called strict scrutiny, which requires a court to find that a restriction is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling government interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[42] Constitutional Law
 🔑 Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

Constitutional Law
 🔑 Strict or exacting scrutiny; compelling interest test

Government regulation of speech is content-based and subject to strict scrutiny under the First Amendment if a law applies to particular speech because of the topic discussed or the idea or message conveyed. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[43] Constitutional Law
 🔑 Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

Constitutional Law
 🔑 Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

In determining whether government regulation of speech is content-based and subject to strict scrutiny under the First Amendment, a court is required to first consider whether the face of the statute draws distinctions based on the message a speaker conveys; if it does not, the court must next consider whether the facially neutral statute cannot be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech, or if the government adopted the statute because of disagreement with the message the speech conveys because if so, then the facially neutral statute will be considered a content-based regulation of speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[44] Constitutional Law
 🔑 Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Laws that are unrelated to the content of speech are subject to an intermediate level of scrutiny under the First Amendment because in most instances they pose a less substantial risk of removing certain ideas or viewpoints from the public dialogue. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[45] Constitutional Law
 🔑 Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

Generally, content-neutral laws impose burdens on speech without reference to the ideas or views expressed. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[46] Constitutional Law
 🔑 Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

Constitutional Law
 🔑 Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

To be content neutral and subject to intermediate scrutiny under the First Amendment, the government regulation of expressive activity must be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[47] Constitutional Law

🔑 Freedom of speech, expression, and press

Constitutional Law

🔑 Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

A regulation that serves purposes unrelated to the content of the expression is deemed neutral, even if it has an incidental effect on some speakers or messages but not others; so long as speaker distinctions are not a subtle means of exercising a content preference, they are not presumed invalid under the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[48] Constitutional Law

🔑 Internet

Provision of Sex Offender Registration Act, requiring the disclosure of internet identities and websites, was content neutral, and thus was subject to intermediate scrutiny in action challenging the provision as facially overbroad in violation of sex offender's anonymous free speech rights under First Amendment; disclosure provision was part of statutory scheme intended to prevent sex offenses against children and to protect the public, although provision singled out sex offenders as category of speakers, face of provision made no reference to content of their speech, and consequences of disclosure provision stemmed from conviction, rather than registration and notification scheme. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; S.H.A. 730 ILCS 150/3(a), 152/101 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[49] Mental Health

🔑 Sex offenders

The purpose and the principal effect of the Sex Offender Community

Notification Law are to inform the public for its own safety, not to humiliate the sex offender; widespread public access is necessary for the efficacy of the scheme, and the attendant humiliation is but a collateral consequence of a valid regulation. S.H.A. 730 ILCS 152/101 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[50] Constitutional Law

🔑 Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Generally, to survive intermediate scrutiny, a content-neutral regulation of protected speech (1) must serve or advance a substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of free speech and (2) must not burden substantially more speech than necessary to further that interest, or in other words, it must be narrowly tailored to serve that interest without unnecessarily interfering with First Amendment freedoms. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[51] Constitutional Law

🔑 Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Generally, reducing crime is a substantial government interest that would support upholding the constitutionality of a content-neutral regulation of protected speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[52] Constitutional Law

🔑 Wisdom

The Supreme Court's role is not to determine how wise legislation may be, but rather to determine its constitutionality; exercising its independent judgment of the facts bearing on an issue of constitutional law, it is the Supreme Court's task in the end to decide whether the legislature has violated the constitution.

Cases that cite this headnote

[53] Constitutional Law

🔑 Policy

Where a party's objections to the constitutionality of a statute are essentially questions of policy, they are more appropriately directed to the legislature than to the Supreme Court.

Cases that cite this headnote

[54] Constitutional Law

🔑 Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Under the narrow-tailoring requirement of intermediate scrutiny, the content-neutral speech regulation need not be the least restrictive or intrusive means of advancing the government's content-neutral interest; rather, the narrow-tailoring requirement is satisfied so long as the law promotes a substantial governmental interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the law. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[55] Constitutional Law

🔑 Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Under intermediate scrutiny, a content-neutral statute is not overbroad when it burdens speech but only when it burdens substantially more speech than necessary to advance its substantial governmental interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[56] Constitutional Law

🔑 Prohibition of substantial amount of speech

First Amendment overbreadth is ultimately found only when a substantial number of a statute's applications to protected speech are unconstitutional in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep; thus, whether a statutory standard produces overbreadth requiring invalidation of the statute may depend on the relative breadth of the statute's coverage. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[57] Constitutional Law

🔑 Internet

Mental Health

🔑 Sex offenders

Provision of Sex Offender Registration Act, requiring the disclosure of internet identities and websites, advanced substantial government interest of preventing sex offenses against children and protecting the public from the danger of recidivist sex offenders, as required for disclosure provision to survive intermediate scrutiny in action challenging the provision as facially overbroad in violation of sex offender's anonymous free speech rights under First Amendment; disclosure provision identified locations on internet to which offender had transferred expressive material from his computer or had otherwise engaged in communication, and disclosures empowered public to make informed decision to avoid such interactions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; S.H.A. 730 ILCS 150/3\(a\), 152/101 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[58] Constitutional Law

🔑 Internet

Provision of Sex Offender Registration Act, requiring the disclosure of internet identities and websites, was tailored to avoid chilling more speech than necessary, as required for disclosure provision to survive intermediate scrutiny in action challenging the provision as facially overbroad in violation of sex offender's anonymous free speech rights under First Amendment; disclosure provision did not require disclosure of individuals with whom sex offenders interacted, did not operate as prior restraint, and only required disclosure of internet identities and websites through which offender communicated with others. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; S.H.A. 730 ILCS 150/3\(a\), 152/101 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

*278 Lisa Madigan, Attorney General, of Springfield (Carolyn Shaprio, Solicitor General, and Michael M. Glick and Joshua M. Schneider, Assistant Attorneys General, of Chicago, of counsel), for the People.

*279 Michael J. Pelletier, State Appellate Defender, Jacqueline L. Bullard, Deputy Defender, and Daaron V. Kimmel, Assistant Appellate Defender, of the Office of the State Appellate Defender, of Springfield, for appellee.

Rebecca K. Glenberg, of Roger Baldwin Foundation of ACLU, Inc., of Chicago, and Adam Schwartz and Sophia Cope, of Electronic Frontier Foundation, of San Francisco, California, amici curiae.

OPINION

Justice FREEMAN delivered the judgment of the court, with opinion.

**67 ¶ 1 Section 3(a) of the Sex Offender Registration Act (Registration Act or Act) requires sex offenders to disclose and periodically update information regarding their Internet identities and websites. 730 ILCS 150/3\(a\) (West 2014). This information is subject to public inspection as provided by the Sex Offender Community Notification Law (Notification Law or Law) (730 ILCS 152/101 et seq. (West 2014)). The circuit court of McLean County entered an order finding that this Internet disclosure provision was overbroad in violation of the first amendment to the United States Constitution. U.S. Const. amend. I. The State appeals directly to this court. Ill. S.Ct. R. 603 (eff. Oct. 1, 2010). We now reverse the order of the circuit court and remand the cause to the circuit court for further proceedings.

¶ 2 I. BACKGROUND

¶ 3 On December 15, 2010, the circuit court adjudicated defendant, Mark Minnis, a delinquent minor for committing the offense of criminal sexual abuse (720 ILCS 5/12–15\(b\) (West 2010)).<sup>1</sup> The court sentenced him to 12 months' probation. Defendant's adjudication for criminal sexual abuse rendered him a “sex offender” pursuant to the Registration Act (730 ILCS 150/2\(A\)\(5\), \(B\)\(1\) (West 2010)). Adhering to the statutory mandate (730 ILCS 150/3–5\(a\) (West 2010)), the court ordered defendant to register as a sex offender.

¶ 4 On December 17, 2010, defendant reported to the Normal police department to register. On his first sex offender registration form, defendant disclosed, inter alia, his two e-mail addresses and his Facebook account. The Registration Act required defendant to report thereafter at least once per year (730 ILCS 150/6 (West 2010)). Defendant's May 2011 registration form listed the same Internet information.<sup>2</sup>

¶ 5 Defendant registered again on August 29, 2014. Defendant included his two e-mail addresses on the registration form, but he omitted his Facebook account. On September 9, Normal police officers viewed defendant's publicly accessible Facebook profile online. They observed that defendant changed his Facebook cover photo only one month prior to his August 2014 registration. On September 12, defendant was arrested and charged by information with failing to register as a sex offender pursuant to section 3(a) of the Act (730 ILCS 150/3(a) (West 2014)). On September 24, defendant was indicted for that offense, "in that he did not register an Internet site, a Facebook page, which he had uploaded content to."

¶ 6 In May 2015, defendant filed a pretrial motion to dismiss the indictment. Defendant argued that the Internet disclosure **68 *280 provision in section 3(a) of the Registration Act was overbroad and vague in violation of the United States Constitution. On July 7, 2015, the circuit court entered an order granting defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment. The court rejected defendant's argument that the challenged provision in section 3(a) was unconstitutionally vague. However, the court found that the Internet disclosure provision was overbroad in violation of the first amendment. In compliance with Illinois Supreme Court Rule 18 (eff. Sept. 1, 2006), the circuit court specifically found the entire Internet disclosure provision unconstitutional, both on its face and as applied to defendant, and based solely on the first amendment.<sup>3</sup>

¶ 7 Because this provision in section 3(a) was held invalid, the State appeals directly to this court. Ill. S.Ct. R. 603 (eff. Oct. 1, 2010). We granted the American Civil Liberties Union of Illinois and the Electronic Frontier Foundation leave to submit an amici curiae brief in support of defendant. Ill. S.Ct. R. 345 (eff. Sept. 20, 2010). Additional pertinent background will be discussed in the context of our analysis of the issues.

¶ 8 II. ANALYSIS

¶ 9 Prior to addressing the merits of the circuit court's finding of unconstitutionality, we must consider which part of section 3(a) of the

Registration Act was properly before the circuit court. Pertinent to the instant case, section 3(a) requires a sex offender to disclose and periodically update two categories of Internet information—identities and websites—described as follows:

"all e-mail addresses, instant messaging identities, chat room identities, and other Internet communications identities that the sex offender uses or plans to use, all Uniform Resource Locators (URLs) registered or used by the sex offender, all blogs and other Internet sites maintained by the sex offender or to which the sex offender has uploaded any content or posted any messages or information * * *." 730 ILCS 150/3\(a\) (West 2014).

The circuit court invalidated the disclosure requirement for both categories.

¶ 10 A. Defendant's Standing

[1] ¶ 11 The State contends that the circuit court "lacked jurisdiction to rule on the constitutionality" of the entire Internet disclosure provision in section 3(a). The State observes that defendant was charged specifically with failing to register his Facebook account, which is an Internet site. Therefore, according to the State, "the circuit court had jurisdiction to rule only on the constitutionality" of the Internet disclosure provision as it pertains to websites and lacked jurisdiction to declare unconstitutional the disclosure provision as it pertains to Internet identities.

[2] [3] [4] ¶ 12 We disagree. The State overlooks that defendant bases his facial challenge to the entire Internet disclosure provision on first amendment overbreadth grounds. The first amendment provides, in pertinent part, that "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom **69 *281 of speech" (U.S. Const. amend.I) and applies to the States through the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment. De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 364, 57 S.Ct. 255, 81 L.Ed. 278 (1937). The assertion of a first amendment overbreadth claim is not the application of a procedural rule but is a function of substantive first amendment law. Sabri

v. United States, 541 U.S. 600, 610, 124 S.Ct. 1941, 158 L.Ed.2d 891 (2004). A state court may not avoid a proper facial attack brought on federal constitutional grounds. New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 767, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113 (1982).

[5] [6] ¶ 13 Generally, a party may not raise, and a court will not consider, a constitutional challenge to a statutory provision that does not affect that party. In re M.I., 2013 IL 113776, ¶¶ 32, 34, 370 Ill.Dec. 785, 989 N.E.2d 173. Thus, a court will not consider a constitutional challenge to a criminal statutory provision under which a defendant has not been charged. See, e.g., People v. Blackorby, 146 Ill.2d 307, 320–21, 166 Ill.Dec. 902, 586 N.E.2d 1231 (1992); People v. Palkes, 52 Ill.2d 472, 480, 288 N.E.2d 469 (1972). This traditional rule reflects two cardinal principles: the personal nature of constitutional rights and prudential limitations on constitutional adjudication. Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 610–11, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973).

[7] [8] ¶ 14 “The First Amendment overbreadth doctrine, however, represents a departure from the traditional rule that a person may not challenge a statute on the ground that it might be applied unconstitutionally in circumstances other than those before the court.” Bates v. State Bar, 433 U.S. 350, 380, 97 S.Ct. 2691, 53 L.Ed.2d 810 (1977). “This ‘exception to the usual rules governing standing,’ Dombrowski v. Pfister, [380 U.S. 479, 486, 85 S.Ct. 1116, 14 L.Ed.2d 22 (1965) ], reflects the transcendent value to all society of constitutionally protected expression.” Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809, 816, 95 S.Ct. 2222, 44 L.Ed.2d 600 (1975). As the United States Supreme Court has explained:

“We have provided this expansive remedy out of concern that the threat of enforcement of an overbroad law may deter or ‘chill’ constitutionally protected speech—especially when the overbroad statute imposes criminal sanctions. [Citations.] Many persons, rather than undertake the considerable burden (and sometimes risk) of vindicating their rights through case-by-case litigation, will choose simply to abstain from protected speech, [citation]—harming not only themselves but society as a whole, which is deprived of an uninhibited marketplace of ideas.” Virginia v. Hicks, 539 U.S. 113, 119, 123 S.Ct. 2191, 156 L.Ed.2d 148 (2003).

Therefore, in the first amendment context, courts permit attacks on overly broad statutes without requiring that the person making the attack show that his or her specific conduct was actually protected. Bigelow, 421 U.S. at 815–16, 95 S.Ct. 2222 (collecting cases); People v. Holder, 96 Ill.2d 444, 449, 71 Ill.Dec. 677, 451 N.E.2d 831 (1983); Village of Schaumburg v. Jeep Eagle Sales Corp., 285 Ill.App.3d 481, 484–85, 221 Ill.Dec. 679, 676 N.E.2d 200 (1996) (based on first amendment overbreadth grounds, defendant charged with violating particular subsections of ordinance had standing to challenge other subsections with which defendant was not charged).

[9] ¶ 15 Of course, a person must present more than subjective allegations of a subjective “chill.” “There must be a ‘claim of specific present objective harm or a threat of specific future harm.’” Bigelow, 421 U.S. at 816–17, 95 S.Ct. 2222 (quoting Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1, 13–14, 92 S.Ct. 2318, 33 L.Ed.2d 154 (1972)).

*282 **70 ¶ 16 In the case at bar, defendant clearly may challenge the entire Internet disclosure provision based on first amendment overbreadth grounds. As a sex offender, defendant is under a continuing obligation to disclose to authorities all of the information specified by section 3(a) of the Registration Act. That includes both Internet identities and websites. Defendant maintains and uses e-mail addresses as well as a Facebook account. Any failure to disclose those e-mail addresses would subject defendant to prosecution under the identity disclosure provision, just as his failure to disclose his Facebook account triggered prosecution under the website disclosure provision. In light of what happened here, the threat of prosecution from such a lapse can hardly be considered speculative. It is real and immediate. See Virginia v. American Booksellers Ass'n, 484 U.S. 383, 392–93, 108 S.Ct. 636, 98 L.Ed.2d 782 (1988).

[10] ¶ 17 Where a person engages in conduct arguably affected with a constitutional interest but proscribed by statute and there exists a credible threat of prosecution thereunder, that person need not risk being arrested and charged before challenging the provision under the first amendment. Babbitt v. United Farm Workers National Union, 442 U.S. 289, 298, 99 S.Ct. 2301, 60 L.Ed.2d 895 (1979). Therefore, defendant clearly could have challenged the Internet identity disclosure provision as well as the website disclosure provision even before this prosecution was initiated. Given that defendant had standing to bring a pre-enforcement action to challenge the entire Internet disclosure provision, it would be anomalous to hold that his standing has somehow been diminished or lost now that charges have actually been filed. Nothing in first amendment jurisprudence supports such a position. Therefore, we hold that the first amendment allowed defendant to challenge the constitutionality of the entire Internet disclosure provision.

[11] ¶ 18 We observe that the circuit court specifically found that the Internet disclosure provision was unconstitutional both on its face and as applied to defendant. An “as applied” challenge requires the challenging party to show that a statute is unconstitutional as it applies to him or her. People v. Garvin, 219 Ill.2d 104, 117, 301 Ill.Dec. 423, 847 N.E.2d 82 (2006). Thus, the particular facts and circumstances surrounding the challenging party become relevant. In re M.A., 2015 IL 118049, ¶¶ 39–40, 397 Ill.Dec. 759, 43 N.E.3d 86; Napleton v. Village of Hinsdale, 229 Ill.2d 296, 305–06, 322 Ill.Dec. 548, 891 N.E.2d 839 (2008).

[12] ¶ 19 However, in the case at bar, the circuit court held no evidentiary hearing and made no findings of fact. In such a factual vacuum, a court is not capable of making an “as applied” determination of unconstitutionality. Without an evidentiary record, any finding that a statute is unconstitutional “as applied” is premature, and the constitutional challenge must be facial. People v. Rizzo, 2016 IL 118599, ¶ 26, 406 Ill.Dec. 488, 61 N.E.3d 92; In re Parentage of John M., 212 Ill.2d 253, 268, 288 Ill.Dec. 142, 817 N.E.2d 500 (2004)

(citing Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 300–01, 113 S.Ct. 1439, 123 L.Ed.2d 1 (1993)).

¶ 20 B. First Amendment Overbreadth

[13] [14] [15] [16] ¶ 21 We now address whether section 3(a) of the Registration Act violates the first amendment by requiring a sex offender to disclose his or her Internet identities and websites (730 ILCS 150/3(a) (West 2014)). The constitutionality of a statute is a question of law that we review de novo. All statutes are presumed to be constitutional. The party challenging the constitutionality of a statute has the burden **71 *283 of clearly establishing its invalidity. A court must construe a statute so as to uphold its constitutionality, if reasonably possible. M.A., 2015 IL 118049, ¶ 21, 397 Ill.Dec. 759, 43 N.E.3d 86; John M., 212 Ill.2d at 265–66, 288 Ill.Dec. 142, 817 N.E.2d 500; People v. Malchow, 193 Ill.2d 413, 418, 250 Ill.Dec. 670, 739 N.E.2d 433 (2000).

[17] [18] ¶ 22 The first amendment right to freedom of speech includes the right to publish and distribute writings while remaining anonymous. McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Comm'n, 514 U.S. 334, 342, 115 S.Ct. 1511, 131 L.Ed.2d 426 (1995); Talley v. California, 362 U.S. 60, 64–65, 80 S.Ct. 536, 4 L.Ed.2d 559 (1960). “Anonymity is a shield from the tyranny of the majority. [Citation.] It thus exemplifies the purpose behind the Bill of Rights, and of the First Amendment in particular: to protect unpopular individuals from retaliation—and their ideas from suppression—at the hand of an intolerant society.” McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 357, 115 S.Ct. 1511.

[19] [20] [21] [22] ¶ 23 First amendment protections for speech extend fully to communications made through the medium of the Internet. “Through the use of chat rooms, any person with a phone line can become a town crier with a voice that resonates farther than it could from any soapbox. Through the use of Web pages, mail exploders, and newsgroups, the same individual can become a pamphleteer. * * * [T]he content on the Internet is as diverse as human thought.” Reno v. American Civil Liberties Union, 521 U.S. 844, 870, 117 S.Ct. 2329, 138 L.Ed.2d 874 (1997) (quoting American Civil Liberties Union v. Reno, 929 F.Supp. 824, 842 (E.D.Pa.1996)). Thus, we agree with our appellate court that the first amendment right to speak anonymously extends to those expressing views on the Internet. Hadley v. Subscriber Doe, 2014 IL App (2d) 130489, ¶ 16, 382 Ill.Dec. 75, 12 N.E.3d 75; Stone v. Paddock Publications, Inc., 2011 IL App (1st) 093386, ¶ 15, 356 Ill.Dec. 284, 961 N.E.2d 380; see also Ghanam v. Does, 303 Mich.App. 522, 845 N.W.2d 128, 137 (2014); Solers, Inc. v. Doe, 977 A.2d 941, 950–51 (D.C.2009); Independent Newspapers, Inc. v. Brodie, 407 Md. 415, 966 A.2d 432, 440–42 (2009); Mobilisa, Inc. v. Doe 1, 217 Ariz. 103, 170 P.3d 712, 717 (Ct.App.2007). Nevertheless, “it is well understood that the right of free speech is not absolute at all times and under all circumstances.” Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 571, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031 (1942). It follows that the right to anonymous speech, including anonymous Internet speech, is not absolute. Ghanam, 845 N.W.2d at 137; Solers, Inc., 977 A.2d at 951.

[23] [24] [25] ¶ 24 In a typical facial challenge, a defendant would have to establish that there is no set of circumstances under which the statute would be valid. The fact that the statute could be found unconstitutional under some circumstances would not establish its facial invalidity. M.A., 2015 IL 118049, ¶ 39, 397 Ill.Dec. 759, 43 N.E.3d 86; John M., 212 Ill.2d at 269, 288 Ill.Dec. 142, 817 N.E.2d 500. However, as earlier discussed, a facial challenge based on first amendment overbreadth is provided out of concern that the threat of enforcement of an overbroad law may chill or deter constitutionally protected speech, especially when the statute imposes criminal penalties. Hicks, 539 U.S. at 119, 123 S.Ct. 2191; People v. Clark, 2014 IL 115776, ¶ 11, 379 Ill.Dec. 77, 6 N.E.3d 154; People v. Bailey, 167 Ill.2d 210, 226, 212 Ill.Dec. 608, 657 N.E.2d 953 (1995). Yet, invalidating a law that in some of its applications is perfectly constitutional has harmful social costs. Recognizing that overbreadth invalidation is “strong medicine,” a law may be invalidated as overbroad only if a substantial **72 *284 number of its applications to protected speech are unconstitutional, judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep. United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 292–93, 128 S.Ct. 1830, 170 L.Ed.2d 650 (2008); Hicks, 539 U.S. at 119–20, 123 S.Ct. 2191; People v. Williams, 235 Ill.2d 178, 199–200, 336 Ill.Dec. 237, 920 N.E.2d 446 (2009).

[26] [27] [28] [29] [30] [31] [32] ¶ 25 We first construe the challenged statute. A court cannot determine whether a statute reaches too far without first knowing what the statute covers. United States v. Stevens, 559 U.S. 460, 474, 130 S.Ct. 1577, 176 L.Ed.2d 435 (2010); People v. Alexander, 204 Ill.2d 472, 485, 274 Ill.Dec. 414, 791 N.E.2d 506 (2003); Bailey, 167 Ill.2d at 226, 212 Ill.Dec. 608, 657 N.E.2d 953. The Registration Act and the Notification Law “operate in tandem, providing a comprehensive scheme for the registration of Illinois sex offenders and the dissemination of information about these offenders to the public.” People v. Cornelius, 213 Ill.2d 178, 181, 290 Ill.Dec. 237, 821 N.E.2d 288 (2004) (citing Malchow, 193 Ill.2d at 416, 250 Ill.Dec. 670, 739 N.E.2d 433). “Our primary objective in construing a statutory scheme is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the legislature.” People v. Boyce, 2015 IL 117108, ¶ 15, 389 Ill.Dec. 585, 27 N.E.3d 77; see People ex rel. Scott v. Illinois Racing Board, 54 Ill.2d 569, 577, 301 N.E.2d 285 (1973) (stating that two statutes were “part of a comprehensive statutory plan * * * and their provisions should be viewed as integral parts of a whole”). The most reliable indicator of legislative intent is the language of the statute, given its plain and ordinary meaning. A court must view the statute as a whole, construing words and phrases in light of other relevant statutory provisions and not in isolation. Each word, clause, and sentence of a statute must be given a reasonable meaning, if possible, and should not be rendered superfluous. The court may consider the reason for the law, the problems sought to be remedied, the purposes to be achieved, and the consequences of construing the statute one way or another. Also, a court presumes that the legislature did not intend to create absurd, inconvenient, or unjust results. People v. Hunter, 2013 IL 114100, ¶ 13, 369 Ill.Dec. 549, 986 N.E.2d 1185 (and cases cited therein).

¶ 26 The Registration Act was enacted in 1986.<sup>4</sup> All sex offenders, as defined by section 2 of the Registration Act (730 ILCS 150/2 (West 2014)), must register in person with local law enforcement officials and “provide accurate information as required by the Department of State Police.” 730 ILCS 150/3(a) (West 2014). Prior to 2007, this information disclosed only the sex offender's actual identity and physical whereabouts. However, a 2007 amendment expanded this information to include a sex offender's Internet identity and websites. Pub. Act 95–229 (eff. Aug. 16, 2007) (amending 730 ILCS 150/3(a) (West 2006)). Section 3(a) currently provides in pertinent part:

“Such information shall include a current photograph, current address, current place of employment, the sex offender's * * * telephone number, including cellular telephone number, the employer's telephone number, school attended, all e-mail addresses, instant messaging identities, chat room identities, and other Internet communications identities that the sex offender uses or plans to use, all <sup>73</sup> <sup>285</sup> Uniform Resource Locators (URLs) registered or used by the sex offender, all blogs and other Internet sites maintained by the sex offender or to which the sex offender has uploaded any content or posted any messages or information * * *. The information shall also include * * * the county of conviction, license plate numbers for every vehicle registered in the name of the sex offender, the age of the sex offender at the time of the commission of the offense, the age of the victim at the time of the commission of the offense, and any distinguishing marks located on the body of the sex offender.” (Emphasis added.) 730 ILCS 150/3(a) (West 2014).

Further, a sex offender “shall report in person to the appropriate law enforcement agency with whom he or she last registered within one year from the date of last registration and every year thereafter and at such other times at the request of the law enforcement agency not to exceed 4 times a year.” 730 ILCS 150/6 (West 2014). With certain exceptions not relevant in this case, a sex offender must register for a 10–year period. 730 ILCS 150/7 (West 2014). A sex offender “who knowingly or wilfully gives material information required by [the Registration Act] that is false is guilty of a Class 3 felony.” 730 ILCS 150/10 (West 2014).

[33] ¶ 27 A sex offender who is subject to the Registration Act “is, in turn, also subject to the provisions of the Notification Law.” Cornelius, 213 Ill.2d at 182, 290 Ill.Dec. 237, 821 N.E.2d 288. Enacted in 1995 (730 ILCS 152/101 et seq. (West 1996)), the Notification Law requires the Illinois State Police to maintain a sex offender database that identifies sex offenders and makes information about them available to the persons that the Law specifies. 730 ILCS 152/115(a) (West 2014). Law enforcement officials must disclose the above-quoted information required under section 3(a) of the Registration Act to the following county entities: institutions of higher education, public school boards, child care facilities, libraries, public housing agencies, the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services, social service agencies providing services to minors, and volunteer organizations providing services to minors. Also, the above-quoted information must be disclosed to any victims of any sex offenses, not only the victim of the sex offense for which the sex offender had been convicted. 730 ILCS 152/120(a) (West 2014) (counties except Cook County). Law enforcement officials may disclose, in their discretion, this information “to any person likely to encounter a sex offender.” 730 ILCS 152/120(b) (West 2014). For all other members of the public, this information must be made available upon request (730 ILCS 152/120(c) (West 2014)) and may be placed “on the Internet or in other media.” 730 ILCS 152/120(d) (West 2014). Further, the Illinois State Police must maintain an Internet website that makes sex offenders' registration information available to the public. 730 ILCS 152/115(b) (West 2014).

[34] [35] ¶ 28 However, dissemination of information regarding juvenile sex offenders is limited to any individual “when that person's safety may be compromised for some reason related to the juvenile sex offender.” 730 ILCS 152/121(a) (West 2014). “Public information concerning juvenile sex offenders thus is much more restricted than information concerning adult sex offenders.” J.W., 204 Ill.2d at 75, 272 Ill.Dec. 561, 787 N.E.2d 747. Also, if the juvenile sex offender is enrolled in school, the local law enforcement agency shall provide a copy of the sex offender registration form only to that school's **74 *286 principal, chief administrative officer, or guidance counselor. The registration information must be kept separate from the juvenile sex offender's other school records. 730 ILCS 152/121(b) (West 2014). Accordingly, while the registry, as it pertains to adults, “provides for wide dissemination of registration information to the public,” a juvenile sex offender's registration information is “available only to a very limited group of people.” People ex rel. Birkett v. Konetski, 233 Ill.2d 185, 203, 330 Ill.Dec. 761, 909 N.E.2d 783 (2009). Further, juvenile sex offenders may petition for termination of registration two years after their initial registration. 730 ILCS 150/3–5(c) (West 2014).<sup>5</sup>

[36] [37] ¶ 29 We next address whether this statutory scheme warrants first amendment scrutiny. There must be a realistic danger that the statute will significantly compromise recognized first amendment rights. Members of the City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 801, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984); Clark, 2014 IL 115776, ¶ 11, 379 Ill.Dec. 77, 6 N.E.3d 154; People v. Haywood, 118 Ill.2d 263, 275, 113 Ill.Dec. 236, 515 N.E.2d 45 (1987) (collecting cases). If the challenged statute does not reach constitutionally protected conduct, our analysis ends. See, e.g., Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 495–96, 102 S.Ct. 1186, 71 L.Ed.2d 362 (1982); Bailey, 167 Ill.2d at 226–28, 212 Ill.Dec. 608, 657 N.E.2d 953; People v. Ryan, 117 Ill.2d 28, 33, 109 Ill.Dec. 162, 509 N.E.2d 1001 (1987).

[38] ¶ 30 Before this court, the State contends that the Internet disclosure provision does not “unconstitutionally burden sex offenders' First Amendment interest in anonymity.” The State observes that the disseminated disclosure information allows the public to identify the Internet forums in which the sex offender has communicated within the offender's previous registration period, up to and including the day he or she registers. “Because section 3(a) largely requires only retroactive disclosure,” the State argues, the Internet disclosure provision does not “eliminate” a sex offender's ability to speak anonymously online. Thus, according to the State, the prospect that the disclosure provision will deter sex offenders from speaking online “is too speculative to support defendant's First Amendment challenge.”

[39] [40] ¶ 31 We disagree. The State is correct that the disclosure provision does not force a sex offender to reveal the information as a precondition to expression. Courts have invalidated such statutes due to the resulting surrender of anonymity. See, e.g., Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of New York, Inc. v. Village of Stratton, 536 U.S. 150, 165–68, 122 S.Ct. 2080, 153 L.Ed.2d 205 (2002); Buckley v. American Constitutional Law Foundation, Inc., 525 U.S. 182, 198–200, 119 S.Ct. 636, 142 L.Ed.2d 599 (1999). However, “constitutional violations may arise from the deterrent, or ‘chilling,’ effect of governmental regulations that fall short of a direct prohibition against the exercise of First Amendment rights.” Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1, 11, 92 S.Ct. 2318, 33 L.Ed.2d 154 (1972). Further, the State overlooks that anonymity protects unpopular individuals from retaliation. McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 341–42, 357, 115 S.Ct. 1511. Retaliation, by definition, is “retroactive” in that it reacts to speech previously uttered. Thus, a statute that operates retroactively can nonetheless unconstitutionally deter or chill anonymous speech. Further, the Registration Act imposes criminal sanctions for noncompliance, **75 *287 which additionally may cause persons whose expression is constitutionally protected to refrain from exercising their rights. Gooding v. Wilson, 405 U.S. 518, 521, 92 S.Ct. 1103, 31 L.Ed.2d 408 (1972). We conclude that the Internet disclosure provision impacts constitutionally protected conduct, and therefore, first amendment scrutiny is warranted.

[41] [42] [43] ¶ 32 The parties next disagree on the appropriate level of scrutiny for the Internet disclosure provision of section 3(a) of the Registration Act. Defendant and amici contend that the disclosure provision is subject to strict judicial scrutiny. Content-based laws are presumptively unconstitutional and may be justified only if they survive so-called strict scrutiny, which requires a court to find that a restriction is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling government interest. Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 576 U.S. —, —, 135 S.Ct. 2218, 2226, 192 L.Ed.2d 236 (2015); Alexander, 204 Ill.2d at 476, 274 Ill.Dec. 414, 791 N.E.2d 506. Government regulation of speech is content-based if a law applies to particular speech because of the topic discussed or the idea or message conveyed. This requires a court to first consider whether the face of the statute draws distinctions based on the message a speaker conveys. If it does not, the court must next consider whether the facially neutral statute cannot be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech, or if the government adopted the statute because of disagreement with the message the speech conveys. If so, then the facially neutral statute will be considered a content-based regulation of speech. Reed, 576 U.S. at —, 135 S.Ct. at 2227–28 (and cases cited therein).

[44] [45] [46] [47] ¶ 33 In contrast, laws that are unrelated to the content of speech are subject to an intermediate level of scrutiny because in most instances they pose a less substantial risk of removing certain ideas or viewpoints from the public dialogue. Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. Federal Communications Comm'n, 512 U.S. 622, 642, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497 (1994). Generally, content-neutral laws impose burdens on speech without reference to the ideas or views expressed. Id. at 643, 114 S.Ct. 2445; Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). To be content neutral, the government regulation of expressive activity must be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech. Ward, 491 U.S. at 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746. Indeed: “A regulation that serves purposes unrelated to the content of the expression is deemed neutral, even if it has an incidental effect on some speakers or messages but not others.” Id. So long as speaker distinctions are not a subtle means of exercising a content preference, they are not presumed invalid under the first amendment. Turner Broadcasting, 512 U.S. at 645, 114 S.Ct. 2445.

[48] ¶ 34 In the case at bar, we agree with the State that the Internet disclosure provision is properly subject to intermediate scrutiny. The provision is part of a statutory scheme intended to prevent sex offenses against children and to protect the public. The statutory scheme protects the public in two ways: it provides crucial information to law enforcement agencies monitoring the movement of sex offenders, and it disseminates the information to the public. Cornelius, 213 Ill.2d at 194, 290 Ill.Dec. 237, 821 N.E.2d 288 (and cases cited therein). Admittedly, the provision does single out sex offenders as a category of speakers. However, the face of the provision makes no reference to, and the purpose of the provision has nothing to do with, the content of their speech.

*288 **76 [49] ¶ 35 Defendant concedes that the Internet disclosure provision “does not directly ban any speech.” However, according to defendant, “if the hostility of the public against scarlet-letter-tagged sex offenders who speak on the Internet drives the speakers away, into silence, the effect is the same: the outcome looks like a ban.” We cannot agree. “The purpose and the principal effect of notification are to inform the public for its own safety, not to humiliate the offender. Widespread public access is necessary for the efficacy of the scheme, and the attendant humiliation is but a collateral consequence of a valid regulation.” Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. 84, 99, 123 S.Ct. 1140, 155 L.Ed.2d 164 (2003). Although the public availability of the website information may have a lasting and painful impact on sex offenders, these consequences flow not from the statutory registration and notification scheme but from the fact of conviction, which is already a matter of public record. See id. at 103, 123 S.Ct. 1140. Therefore, we conclude that the disclosure provision is content neutral and, accordingly, is subject to intermediate scrutiny.

[50] ¶ 36 In the first amendment speech context, intermediate scrutiny is articulated in several similar forms. Generally, to survive intermediate scrutiny, a content-neutral regulation of protected speech (1) must serve or advance a substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of free speech and (2) must not burden substantially more speech than necessary to further that interest—or in other words, it must be narrowly tailored to serve that interest without unnecessarily interfering with first amendment freedoms. See Turner Broadcasting, 512 U.S. at 662, 114 S.Ct. 2445; Members of the City Council, 466 U.S. at 804–05, 104 S.Ct. 2118.

[51] ¶ 37 The State asserts that the purpose of the Internet disclosure provision “is to protect the public from the danger of recidivist sex offenders, which is a substantial government interest.” Defendant and amici are correct to agree that this is a legitimate interest. Generally, “reducing crime is a substantial government interest.” City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 435, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002). More particularly: “The prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse of children constitutes a government objective of surpassing importance.” New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 757, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113 (1982); accord People v. Huddleston, 212 Ill.2d 107, 132–33, 287 Ill.Dec. 560, 816 N.E.2d 322 (2004) (and cases cited therein). “Although there is considerable debate over the degree to which treatment of sex offenders may be effective, it is clear that state legislatures may respond to what they reasonably perceive as a ‘substantial risk of recidivism.’ ” (Emphasis in original.) Huddleston, 212 Ill.2d at 138, 287 Ill.Dec. 560, 816 N.E.2d 322 (quoting Smith, 538 U.S. at 103, 123 S.Ct. 1140). Since 1996, every state in the nation has had a law providing for mandatory registration of sex offenders and corresponding community notification. Smith, 538 U.S. at 89–90, 123 S.Ct. 1140. Thus, the remaining issue is whether the disclosure provision advances this interest in conformance with first amendment principles.

¶ 38 Defendant and amici contend that the statutory scheme for Internet disclosure deters or chills substantially more speech than is necessary to further the governmental interest. For example, defendant posits that juvenile sex offenders “have a low risk of reoffending and a high potential for rehabilitation due to their continuing brain development.” Therefore, defendant argues, the application of the disclosure provision to juvenile sex offenders “renders it substantially overbroad” in violation of the first amendment. However, as we earlier explained, public information regarding juvenile sex offenders is much more restricted than information regarding adult sex offenders and is available only to a very limited group of people. See Konetski, 233 Ill.2d at 203, 330 Ill.Dec. 761, 909 N.E.2d 783; J.W., 204 Ill.2d at 75, 272 Ill.Dec. 561, 787 N.E.2d 747. Further, juvenile sex offenders can petition for termination of registration after two years. 730 ILCS 150/3–5(c) (West 2014). This statutory qualification for juvenile sex offenders shows the legislative intent to avoid burdening substantially more speech than necessary to further its governmental interest.

¶ 39 Defendant next argues that, “[b]eyond the issue of juvenile offenders,” the Internet disclosure provision nonetheless “applies to far too many people, in general.” Defendant argues that the provision applies to all sex offenders “without conducting any individualized risk assessment, so that sex offenders with no risk to reoffend are included alongside high-risk offenders. Besides being poor policy in general, this makes the speech burdens at issue here dramatically overbroad.” Citing Whole Woman's Health v. Hellerstedt, 579 U.S. —, —, 136 S.Ct. 2292, 2310, 195 L.Ed.2d 665 (2016), defendant contends that this court has an independent duty to assess this issue while engaging in our constitutional analysis.

[52] [53] ¶ 40 We reject defendant's characterization of the Internet disclosure provision as “poor policy.” “Our role is not to determine how wise legislation may be, but rather to determine its constitutionality.” People v. J.S., 103 Ill.2d 395, 407, 83 Ill.Dec. 156, 469 N.E.2d 1090 (1984). Exercising our independent judgment of the facts bearing on an issue of constitutional law, it is our task in the end to decide whether the legislature has violated the constitution. Whole Woman's Health, 579 U.S. at —, 136 S.Ct. at 2310; Sable Communications of California, Inc. v. Federal Communications Comm'n, 492 U.S. 115, 129, 109 S.Ct. 2829, 106 L.Ed.2d 93 (1989). Where a party's objections are essentially questions of policy, they are more appropriately directed to the legislature than to this court. In re A.A., 2015 IL 118605, ¶ 27, 398 Ill.Dec. 37, 43 N.E.3d 947.

¶ 41 Regarding the lack of an individualized risk assessment for sex offenders, the legislature is entitled to “conclude that a conviction for a sex offense provides evidence of substantial risk of recidivism.” Smith, 538 U.S. at 103, 123 S.Ct. 1140; accord Huddleston, 212 Ill.2d at 138, 287 Ill.Dec. 560, 816 N.E.2d 322. Although we exercise independent judgment on issues of constitutional law, the legislature is in a better position than the judiciary to gather and evaluate data bearing on complex problems. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 440, 122 S.Ct. 1728; Turner Broadcasting, 512 U.S. at 665–66, 114 S.Ct. 2445 (opinion of Kennedy, J., joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and Blackmun and Souter, JJ.).

[54] ¶ 42 Further, it must be remembered that under the narrow-tailoring requirement of intermediate scrutiny, the content-neutral speech regulation need not be the least restrictive or intrusive means of advancing the government's content-neutral interest. Rather, the narrow-tailoring requirement is satisfied so long as the law promotes a substantial governmental interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the law. Turner Broadcasting, 512 U.S. at 662, 114 S.Ct. 2445; Ward, 491 U.S. at 798–99, 109 S.Ct. 2746. Here, it is undeniable that the Internet disclosure provision directly and effectively serves the State's substantial interest in protecting the public from recidivist sex **78 *290 offenders. Absent this provision, this interest would be served less well. See Ward, 491 U.S. at 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746.

¶ 43 Defendant also argues that the Internet disclosure provision applies “to too much speech.” In declaring the provision unconstitutional, the circuit court found that the provision “has no limitations on the type of speech or communication which the offender is required to report and register, regardless of whether that speech is in any way related to the legitimate purpose” of the provision. According to defendant, the “immense sweep” of the provision goes “beyond the State's purpose of protecting the public from potential sex offenses: the State's purpose is a needle in a haystack of burdened speech.”

[55] [56] ¶ 44 We disagree. It must be remembered that under intermediate scrutiny, a content-neutral statute is not overbroad when it burdens speech but only when it burdens substantially more speech than necessary to advance its substantial governmental interest. Turner Broadcasting, 512 U.S. at 662, 114 S.Ct. 2445; Members of the City Council, 466 U.S. at 804–05, 104 S.Ct. 2118. Similarly, first amendment overbreadth is ultimately found only when a substantial number of a statute's applications to protected speech are unconstitutional in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep. Hicks, 539 U.S. at 119–20, 123 S.Ct. 2191; Broadrick, 413 U.S. at 612–13, 93 S.Ct. 2908. Thus, whether a statutory standard produces overbreadth requiring invalidation of the statute may depend on the relative breadth of the statute's coverage. See Ashcroft v. American Civil Liberties Union, 535 U.S. 564, 592, 122 S.Ct. 1700, 152 L.Ed.2d 771 (2002) (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment, joined by Souter and Ginsburg, JJ.).

[57] ¶ 45 In the case at bar, we conclude that the Internet disclosure provision advances the substantial governmental interest of preventing sex offenses against children and protecting the public from the danger of recidivist sex offenders. The disclosure provision identifies the locations on the Internet to which the sex offender has transferred expressive material from his computer or has otherwise engaged in communication. These disclosures empower the public, if it wishes, to make the informed decision to avoid such interactions. The information required for the public to protect itself is broad because any communication by a sex offender with the public is related to the statutory purpose.

¶ 46 We observe that federal district courts have declared sex offender Internet disclosure requirements overbroad. In Doe v. Nebraska, 898 F.Supp.2d 1086, 1121 (D.Neb.2012), the court opined: “Blogs frequently, and perhaps mostly, involve discussion of matters of public concern. Blogs are by their nature open to the public and pose no threat to children. * * * A site publicly available on the Internet poses no threat to children —after all, every police officer in the world can see it.” Similarly, in White v. Baker, 696 F.Supp.2d 1289, 1310 (N.D.Ga.2010), the court opined:

“This internet communication form does not reasonably present a vehicle by which a sex offender can entice a child to have illicit sex. * * * In the Court's experience, these communications are those that occur privately in direct email transmissions * * * and in instant messages. They generally do not occur in communications that are posted publicly on sites dedicated to discussion of public, political, and social issues.”

As seen, these courts failed to recognize the breadth necessary to protect the public.

*291 **79 ¶ 47 Additionally, the court in Doe v. Harris, 772 F.3d 563, 578–82 (9th Cir.2014), found that the California Internet disclosure requirement was overbroad because public disclosure and notification would chill speech. However, the court failed to engage in the comparative analysis of whether the chilling effect was substantially broader than that required by the statutory purpose.

[58] ¶ 48 Also, despite its plainly legitimate sweep, the Internet disclosure provision is tailored to avoid chilling more speech than necessary, or in other words, to lessen the number of unconstitutional applications. Initially, the provision does not require disclosure of individuals with whom sex offenders interact, if any. Further, as we earlier observed, the provision does not operate as a prior restraint. Rather, it requires the sex offender to disclose his or her Internet identities and the websites to which he or she uploaded content or posted messages or information during the previous registration period up to and including the day he or she registers. While this retroactive operation does not remove the provision from first amendment scrutiny, it certainly constitutes an example of narrow tailoring. See Doe v. Shurtleff, 628 F.3d 1217, 1225 (10th Cir.2010) (upholding Utah's sex offender Internet disclosure statute against first amendment overbreadth challenge). Further, the provision requires disclosure only of Internet identities and websites through which a sex offender has communicated with others. Thus, the legislature “did no more than eliminate the exact source of the evil it sought to remedy.” Members of the City Council, 466 U.S. at 808, 104 S.Ct. 2118. Indeed, any attempt to more narrowly tailor the disclosure provision to exclude “innocent” subjects, whatever they may be and however chosen, would defeat the purpose of the provision.

¶ 49 We hold that the Internet disclosure provision survives intermediate scrutiny because it advances a substantial governmental interest without chilling more speech than necessary. Therefore, defendant has failed to establish that the Internet disclosure provision of section 3(a) of the Registration Act is facially unconstitutional because it is substantially overbroad in violation of the first amendment.

¶ 50 III. CONCLUSION

¶ 51 For the foregoing reasons, the order of the circuit court of McLean County is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings.

¶ 52 Reversed.

¶ 53 Cause remanded.

Chief Justice GARMAN and Justices THOMAS, KILBRIDE, KARMEIER, BURKE, and THEIS concurred in the judgment and opinion.

All Citations

2016 IL 119563, 67 N.E.3d 272, 409 Ill.Dec. 60

Footnotes

- 1 Defendant, then 16 years old, committed an act of sexual penetration or sexual conduct with the victim, who was 14 years old. The offense is a Class A misdemeanor. 720 ILCS 5/12–15\(b\), \(d\) (West 2010).
- 2 These are the only two registration forms contained in the record.
- 3 The parties base their arguments exclusively on the first amendment. However, amici additionally invoke the free speech guaranty of the Illinois Constitution (Ill. Const. 1970, art. I, § 4). An amicus curiae is not a party but a friend of the court, who takes the case with the issues framed by the parties. Because the parties do not rely on the state constitutional free speech guaranty, we decline to discuss it. See In re J.W., 204 Ill.2d 50, 72–73, 272 Ill.Dec. 561, 787 N.E.2d 747 (2003); Burger v. Lutheran General Hospital, 198 Ill.2d 21, 61–62, 259 Ill.Dec. 753, 759 N.E.2d 533 (2001).
- 4 The statute was originally titled the Habitual Child Sex Offender Registration Act (Ill.Rev.Stat.1987, ch. 38, ¶ 221 et seq.). A 1996 amendment gave the statute its current title (730 ILCS 150/1 et seq. (West 1996)).
- 5 The record does not disclose whether defendant petitioned for termination.