OEIG Oversees State Hiring Practices

In addition to the OEIG’s investigative duties, the OEIG also ensures that State agencies comply with employment laws. In particular, the OEIG is required to ensure that State agencies comply with a 1990 United States Supreme Court decision that affects government employment practices. In the Rutan case, the Court held that public employers may not make employment decisions for non-policymaking positions on the basis of political party affiliation or support.

The OEIG has a team of attorneys and investigators specializing in cases involving Rutan-compliant employment interviews and procedures. Anyone with information about improper hiring or employment practices in State agencies is encouraged to contact the OEIG.

OEIG In the News

A recent Daily Herald article (“State workers not fired for fireable offenses,” August 8, 2011) discussed employee disciplinary actions imposed in response to OEIG investigations. The Herald correctly noted that actions taken by State agencies are sometimes at odds with OEIG recommendations.

By law, the OEIG investigates misconduct but does not have enforcement authority. When misconduct is uncovered, the OEIG issues a written report that includes:

- the allegations of misconduct;
- facts confirmed by the investigation;
- an analysis of the facts in comparison to the law; and
- findings and recommendations.

State agencies have the discretion to adopt OEIG’s recommendations, which may include:

- termination;
- nonspecific disciplinary action;
- counseling or reminder to follow policy; and/or
- change to State agency policy or practice.
